In 2009 CompassPoint moved to Cary in the South Bay to Contra Costa County in the East Bay, so it has been great to have the opportunity to work with its mission to improve the lives of children and youth in our community and throughout the state of California.

CompassPoint has given us a foundation to shape our work and think about the culture of this nonprofit sector. We plan to continue to serve as each other's "magnitude and bond" in the future.

Bottom: Aaron, a youth Employment Specialist at CompassPoint, is shown a Step it Up class.

We are each other's business. We all are strengthened organizations of the nonprofit sector. As our poster

The population work that CompassPoint does with the tandem of San Francisco and successful leadership has to run deep and wide within the organization. It has given me a new perspective on how to think about the culture of the organization I want to lead.

CompassPoint strives hard to make sure that leaders and others in the community development movement are able to meet EDs from similar organizations. The impact of community nonprofits.

The number one impact of CompassPoint's assistance was the focus groups that we did with staff, board, and the management team. We've never had one as comprehensive and, if something's not working, to question why we are still holding onto it.